Enjoy some photos and thoughts from our 2010 Expedition Team members.

This boy lives in Julius village ---a barren, dusty place.

Because water is scarce and so heavy to carry home, this boy goes without clean clothes or a needed face wash.

Near the well the plants thrive with needed water. Unfortunately, most of the homes in this village are very far from the well, so the area around their homes is barren.

Water is a luxury that has to be worked for. The women carry it for long distances on their heads. Because of that, it must be used wisely, for cooking, cleaning, washing, and drinking.

Everywhere you look there are women and children carrying water from the public pumps. These pumps are not on all day so they have to plan their day around when they can get water and carry it back to their homes. This is probably more efficient than a stroller and a wheelbarrow.

But two heads are better than one. Together we can carry more.
